

The exhibition Heartbeat/Mother Earth can be seen as a re-departure for George Littlechild. Although the title is clearly associated with global origins, it also signals change and the passing of time – ideas that are further reflected in his work. Littlechild's distinctive combination of luminous colours, gestural markings, textures and shapes brings together a body of work that is both fresh and familiar. His paintings are imbued with a new energy and spirit, notably through a marked change in the handling of paint, composition and subject matter.

In Advancing Into The Dream (front cover), Littlechild depicts a male figure in the centre of the composition. He is gazing past the viewer, beyond the confines of the painted surface. Behind him, an eagle soars across the composition. The entire surface is active, alive with colour and movement. Advancing Into The Dream is both confident and confrontational. It suggests change and movement through its title and composition. In a sense, this painting underlines a new direction for Littlechild's work: although reflective of the past, it is grounded in the present, looking beyond to the future.

Heartbeat/Mother Earth, Littlechild's fifth solo exhibition at the Gallery of Tribal Art, represents a continuum of life and artistic process. Through his work, Littlechild continues to expand his aesthetic vision and steadily advance into the dream.
